About me

I am an outgoing, curious, and easygoing person who enjoys seeing where life takes me. I love spending time with kids in a home setting and tend to balance being both social and reflective. I am a mix of an introvert and extrovert depending on the vibe.

In my free time, I enjoy going to the gym, exploring new places to eat, and discovering fun spots to visit. I love to be outdoors but also appreciate relaxing nights in after a busy day.

I am a big fan of women's basketball and I really enjoy dancing, even if I don't know all the genres yet, I am always open to learning new ones!

Although I haven't left the U.S. since becoming a permanent resident (yay!), I've traveled within the country and lived in Mexico for five years when I was younger. I haven't lived with a host family before, but I am really excited for this new experience. What excites me most about living and teaching in Chile is being able to experience daily life in a new place while doing what I love, teaching! I believe there's so much to learn beyond the classroom, and immersing myself in the Chilean lifestyle will help me grow personally and professionally.

I would love to be part of a lively, social home environment, it feels like the best way to make the most of this experience for me. I don't have any dietary restrictions or allergies, but I do prefer a pet-free home.

With this experience, I hope to learn what life in Chile really looks like, from everyday traditions to cultural celebrations, and I am just as excited to share my own experiences of living in both Mexico and the United States. I speak Spanish, so I'm confident communication won't be a problem. I am really looking forward to connecting cultures, building relationships, and creating lasting memories throughout this experience!
